hi —

5:47 AM · MALDIVES · A TUESDAY IN MARCH

The morning you've been working toward.

Hi, I'm [Your Name].

I built Preface because the travel industry forgot how to be personal.

I've spent the last few years watching friends spend $8K on honeymoons through Expedia and arrive to rooms with parking-lot views — when the same $8K, through me, gets them an ocean-facing suite, daily breakfast, and a $200 spa credit. Same price. Different arrival.

The economics have always been like this — hotels pay advisors a commission whether you book through them or not. The question is who gets that commission: an algorithm, or someone who knows your dates, your dietary preferences, and which property to actually recommend.

I started Preface because there's a generation of people now hitting their peak travel years who never had a relationship with an advisor. Their parents had advisors. They have Booking.com.

This is for them. For you, probably.

— with care,

here's what i mean —

Four real bookings from the past few months. What the client paid is the same. What arrived is not.

a confession —

"None of these clients knew to ask for any of it. That's the entire point of the practice."

— FIELD NOTE, MARCH 2026

notes from a recent stay —

a few things i believe —

The brochure is not the room.

I've stayed at 20+ all-inclusives across the Caribbean and Mexico. Most agencies plan resort trips they've only read about. That's how clients end up at Sandals when they should be at Excellence Playa Mujeres.

I know which property has a real kids' club, which adults-only is genuinely quiet at 11pm, which $700/night room is actually worth $700. I know which months not to go to Riviera Maya. I know which Sandals are the two worth visiting and which to skip.

It is, on its surface, a small advantage. Stay where you sell. But it's the difference between booking a brochure and booking a trip.

— with care,

what i actually plan —

The trips that have to land.

— 01 / HONEYMOONS

The trip you've been overthinking for nine months.

Maldives over-water. Bali by region. Greek isles. The right answer depends on whether you want to read in bed or do something every day.

> my pick —
>
> "Right now, for couples with $12–18K to spend, I'm sending most to Six Senses Bhutan. It's the most underrated honeymoon property in Asia."

— 02 / FAMILY

An all-inclusive that doesn't feel like one.

Real kids' clubs. Adult zones that are actually quiet. I've stayed at most of them. I know which marketing photos lie about the beach.

> my pick —
>
> "For families with kids 7+, Hyatt Ziva Cap Cana. For older kids and teens, Beaches Turks. Skip Sandals — Beaches is the better brand for families."

— 03 / GROUPS + MILESTONES

Twenty people. One trip. We can do this.

40th birthdays. Parents' anniversaries. Multi-generational family travel. The trip where someone usually loses their mind.

> my pick —
>
> "For bach groups of 8–12 right now: Mexico City over Tulum, every time. Better food, fewer crowds, more interesting."

— 04 / THE SPECIALTY

Twenty resorts, personally slept in.

Most agencies plan resort trips they've only read about. I know which property has a real kids' club, which adults-only is genuinely quiet at 11pm.

> my hot take —
>
> "Excellence Playa Mujeres > Excellence Punta Cana. I'll die on this hill. The full ranking is in the newsletter."

one recent booking —

This actually happened. Last month.

A couple I've known since university booked their honeymoon to Six Senses Fiji. They paid $8,000 for what they thought was a Pool Villa. At check-in, the front desk handed them keys to the Premier Beachfront Pool Villa.

The room they walked into would have cost $2,400 more on Booking.com.

Daily breakfast was included. A $100 spa credit waited at the concierge desk. A bottle of champagne sat on the table, with a note: "Mr. & Mrs. K. — welcome home."

None of it cost extra. None of it was asked for. The hotel paid Fora the commission they would have paid Booking.com — except Booking.com would have kept it. I hand it back in the room.

— that's the whole pitch.

HONEYMOON · M+S · MAY 2026
SIX SENSES FIJI · 7 NIGHTS · PREMIER BEACHFRONT POOL VILLA

when you're ready —

Tell me where you're going.

Twenty minutes. No pitch, no pressure. If I'm not the right fit, I'll tell you.
